

FOOTPADS ATTACK WOMAN.

March Her Unconscious in Stealing Her Handbag.

Two men jumped from the bushes on Hudson street, between the Hudson Boulevard and Berengette avenue, in North Bergen, yesterday and attacked Mrs. Nancy Hunt, the wife of Vincent Hunt of No. 709 Thirty-sixth street. They tried to wrest her handbag from her. She fought back and one of them struck her over the head with a heavy weapon, knocking her unconscious.

Two men coming from work found her half an hour later and partly revived her and took her home. Her handbag, which contained $25 and a gold watch, was missing.

ROCHESTER, Sept. 29.—C. A. Root, a Hollander, recently arrived in this country, shot and killed Ray Gillis, a painter, early to-day. Gillis was trying to enter the barn on the Bellem farm, near this city, where Root was employed.

The New Plays

'Daddy Long-Legs' Goes Straight To the Heart.

BY CHARLES DARNTON.

SENSATION-SEEKING Broadway has a great deal to learn from "Daddy Long-Legs," the appealing little play by Jean Webster that makes the Gaiety Theatre a green spot along the Great Scorching Way. After all, there's nothing like a simple play with a human touch to bring us back to our senses.

In realizing this fact Henry Miller proves himself a wise manager, even though he betrays the common weakness of creating a star overnight, perhaps by way of making us blink, where otherwise we might merely gaze. While he may have been a bit hasty in this respect, his enterprise is most promising, for with careful guidance Miss Ruth Chatterton may one day find herself following in the footsteps of Miss Maude Adams. But in full justice to Miss Webster it must be said that her play needs no star. It is so true to itself that it wins on its own merits.

"Daddy Long-Legs" goes straight to the heart—walks right in without stopping to knock. The moment the curtain rises on those little waifs in the orphanage one's sympathies are awakened. There's something very odd about orphans when they cover a table about which hungry children gather. Yet these poor little things are not altogether unhappy in their cheerless surroundings—just because they are children. The scene recalls "Oliver Twist," and Judy, the drudge who finds time to "mother" the youngsters, seems like a sister of Oliver who has been left behind to work herself into old age before she has known the meaning of youth.

Only a woman with a woman's sympathy for children could have written this scene, only a woman's understanding could have given it human warmth instead of bleak dreariness. The feminine hand is also to be detected at every turn in the strange fortunes of Judy after she breaks out into rebellion against the hypocritical matron before the scandalized trustees and is sent off to college by her unknown benefactor. She knows him only by the shadow he throws in the light of his motor car, and so she calls him "Daddy Long-Legs." The rest of the story is the old one of the guardian who learns to love his ward and finally wins her young heart. But it is told in a new way, with uncommon charm and delightful touches of humor.

Miss Webster has been particularly successful in making her characters real human beings. For example, the quaint old nurse who never misses a word that passes along the party wire of her telephone is delightfully true to life. Ever the time the bell rings off she trots eager to hear what her neighbors are saying. Her taste in literature is revealed in the simple statement that she likes her-rosiness to be rich. We may well share her astonishment, however, over Judy's sudden rise to fame as a writer of fiction. But perhaps allowances should be made for "genius." In any event Judy develops into a most extraordinary young woman.

Miss Chatterton does her best work as the drudge. Weariness seems to cling to her, and her sulky attitude toward the matron suggests the bitterness of her life in the orphanage. But her abrupt style of speech is out of harmony with her later surroundings and produces the somewhat unpleasant effect of a mannerism. It occasionally mars the rare, girlish charm she gives to the role. Then, too, she is inclined to bite off her words at that times we get only part of them. In the last act her overdone the part to such a degree that it loses much of its simplicity. But her performance as a whole is both charming and appealing.

Charles Waldron plays the guardian with fine sincerity. Mrs. Jacques Martin is capital as the nurse, and Miss Mabel Hunt, who seems to be sympathetic and tender by nature, is like a mother to Judy. The children are very good—in fact, the whole company is excellent. Everybody helps to make "Daddy Long-Legs" an unusually charming play.

KILLS HIMSELF AFTER SENDING WIFE ON VISIT

Uniondale Man Fires Four Times One Shot Tearing Away Part of Arm.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., Sept. 30.—When Mrs. Charles Newman found the body of her husband in their home at Uniondale to-day with a charge of buckshot in the head and a gun lying nearby it was at first believed he had been murdered.

Coroner W. R. Jones, District Attorney Lewis J. Smith and County Detective Phineas Seamen finally decided that Newman, a prosperous house builder, had committed suicide in an astounding manner. First he killed his seven-year-old daughter good-bye and sent her off to school. Then he asked his wife to call on friends in Hempstead.

Evidence obtained by Coroner Jones showed Newman fired the shotgun four times before he succeeded in killing himself. The first two shots went wild, lodging in a wall, a door and tearing out part of a window. The third charge tore off part of Newman's left arm. Then, able to use only one arm, he put a shell into the gun, according to the theory of Coroner Jones and District Attorney Smith, cocked the weapon, rested the butt on the floor and discharged it by jabbing at the trigger with a stick. The shot caused instant death.

SUMMON CAPT. BERESFORD.

Once Refusing, Britain Now Accepts His Services.

The Cunard liner Mauretania sailed from her pier at 1 o'clock this morning with 155 first class passengers, 150 second and 225 third. About 2,000 bags of mail were put aboard the steamer. On the sailing list was the name of Capt. Henry Beresford, husband of Kitty Gordon, the actress.

Capt. Beresford sailed for England several months ago to offer his services to his country, but was refused because of his age. The Captain had returned to America by the Mauretania on her last trip, but had not been here long when a cable arrived requesting the first runner to accept his services.
